Workshop on Introduction to intellectual Property Rights

Introduction

Any rights over creations of the mind or products of the intellect are known as intellectual property rights. For instance, if someone composes a piece of music, then he or she can be thought to have used their intellect and innate talent to create the artwork and hence, they are entitled to have rights over their creation. Similarly, when someone codes an app or software which is similarly a work of their intellect, then the law provides for provisions wherein the individuals who have created the software or the app can have rights over its distribution, licensing, and sale. Of course, to qualify for protection under the existing intellectual property regime, the creator has to conclusively prove that the creation is his or hers and they have not lifted the idea or the process from someone else or have not copied their creation from an existing piece of intellectual property.

Types of Intellectual Property Rights

The intellectual property rights cover the musical, literary, artistic, inventions and discoveries, and even designs, artworks, phrases, words, and symbols. Indeed, it can be said that IPR (Intellectual Property Rights) encompass any work of the mind and hence, the ambit of the works that are covered is indeed growing by the day considering the fact that the 21st century has witnessed an explosion in the number of products that are creations of the intellect.

There are several types of IPR and some of them are trademarks, patents, copyright, trade secrets, and rights over industrial designs. Without elaborating in detail on these types of IPR since this article is intended to be an introductory primer, it needs to be mentioned that with the growing trend of IPR theft and violations wherein the chances of stealing and lifting as well as copying and imitating the works of others has become rampant, an entire industry of lawyers, legal experts, and legal firms are engaged in advising their clients about the nuances of filing for protection under IPR laws and suing imitators and violators as the need arises.

The Objectives of IPR

The stated objective of the existing IPR regime is to ensure that the creator is encouraged to produce more and create more by protecting his or her creations from copying and imitation and hence, place him or her in a position wherein they can commercially gain from their creations. The intention is to ensure that the artist, composer, scientist, developer, and engineer as well as anyone who has created a work of the mind is incentivized to profit monetarily from their creations thereby encouraging the progress of society.
